No one wants to see wages cut below the fiving point but a wartinge wage is not a living wage. No one wants to see business conducted for less than a just and reasonable profit but wartime profits are no longer pay. More is not expected. Less just or reasonable. It is better to operate upon diminished proofs than to come up shop, better to work louger hours or for diminished wages than to be iffle. Neither the profibeering employer nor the profiteering employe can travel very far or very fast on the road to prosperity. No one will give them a lift, and when they fall no one will pick them up. The merchant and manufacturer who refuse to defiate their prices, the railroad which cuts wages and then declines to meet shippers half way the mine workman and the printer and the carpenter who inalst upon less and less work and more and more pay are equally wrong, equally un-American, equally behind the times and equally in the way.
